TWO DIE FROM FATAL MISHAPS

Mrs. Lydia Stockslager Trips over Oil Cloth and Breaks Hip. Dies as Result of Shock. John Strasbaugh Killed in Mill.

MRS. LYDIA STOCKSLAGER
As the result of a fall at her home a week or more ago, Mrs. Lydia Stock-slager died Sunday evening at the home of D. Calvin Rudisill, Two Taverns, aged 77 years.

Mrs. Stockslager had for some time been making her home with her only child, Mrs. Rudisill, and one day recently tripped over the upturned edge of a piece of oil cloth. She fell heavily to the floor and examination showed that one of her hips had been broken.
She was given every care but the shock and resulting complications caused her death on Sunday.

Mrs. Stockslager was the widow of Joseph Stockslager, who died in 1895.
She leaves the daughter with whom she lived and one brother, Jacob Har-ner, residing near Gettysburg.

The funeral will be held on Wednesday morning with services at the Rudisill home at ten o'clock. Interment at St. Mark's Reformed church on the Baltimore Pike.

JOHN STRASBAUGH

Five hours after he was caught in the main drive belt at the mill of David McClellan, several miles from Fairfield, John Strasbaugh, 25 years old, died at his home Monday evening.
His skull was fractured and death was the result of concussion of the brain.

Young Strasbaugh was employed about the mill, and the fatal accident occurred as he stepped across the belt running from the fly wheel to the engine. He misjudged the distance, was caught by the rapidly moving belt and thrown twenty five feet through the air, landing on his head.
Picking himself up Mr. Strasbaugh walked about for several moments;
but it was seen that he was more seriously hurt than he himself realized and other men about the place helped him to his home.

There he soon became very ill and by the time a physician arrived he was in a serious condition. He sank gradually until about six o'clock when he died.

He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. William Strasbaugh, of near Fairfield, and beside his parents, leaves a sister,
Miss Elizabeth Strasbaugh, at home.
Funeral on Wednesday morning at the Catholic church in Fairfield. Interment in the church cemetery.

EDWARD SINGLEY

Edward Singley died at the home of his son, John Singley, in Hamiltonban township this morning at one o'clock, aged 78 years.

He leaves three sons, Harry Sing-ley, of Knoxlyn; George and John Singley, of Hamiltonban township.

Funeral service at the house Thursday morning at 10:00 o'clock. Interment in Fairfield cemetery. Rev. W.
K. Fleck officiating.

TO NEED BIBLES IN OTHER LANDS

Gettysburg Society at its Annual Business Meeting on Monday Heard of Coming Demand for Bibles in War Stricken Countries.

That the American Bible Society, of which the Woman's Bible Society of Gettysburg is a part, will need a substantial increase in revenue in order to supply the European demand on account of the war, was the report made Monday afternoon at the annual business meeting of the local organization.

In Bibles, as in nearly everything else, the production in the countries across the sea is going to be materially diminished on account of the war, and it will be necessary for the United States to contribute most liberally in order that the work of the general organization may not be hampered for years. A letter from the head of the Society, outlining this condition, was read to the Gettysburg Bible Society at its meeting Monday and efforts will be made to secure even more liberal contributions than usual.

Some of the collectors for the work of this year were appointed as follows: Miss Laura Spangler, Miss Lillie McClean, Miss Anna Gilliland,
Mrs. E. M. Wolf, Mrs. John M. Blocher, Mrs. Amos Eckert, Miss Minnie Basehoar, Miss Esther Crouse and Miss Cora Topper. Others will be added later on.

The officers of the past year were re-elected: president, Mrs. Helena Keith; secretary, Miss Julia Gilbert;
treasurer, Miss Luella McAllister;
librarian, Miss Anna Reck.

SAVES HER BARN FROM INCENDIARY

Widow who Lost Three Story Building Last Winter as Result of Firebug, Narrowly Escapes Another Loss. Found in Time.

Evidently the object of spite on the part of an unknown enemy, Mrs. Mary L. Wolford, of Pen Mar, is suffering as the result of several attempts to burn her property.

Last winter her three story cottage containing some thirty rooms, was burned to the ground, the fire originating on the second story of the premises at the dead hour of night.
This fire was plainly incendiary, as Mrs. Wolford and her son, the only inmates of the house, occupied apartments on the first floor and the upper floors were unoccupied. No clues, however, came to light. Mrs. Wolford rebuilt and since the first of August has been occupying the new cottage on the site of the old one.

On Friday night her enemy was abroad again and at the old conspiracy to destroy her property. During her absence her stable was fired and but for the mere accident of her arrival home soon after the blaze started, her barn would have been in ashes with two head of horses, a lot of chickens, a valuable house dog, a new falling top buggy, a lot of hay, fodder and corn and an equipment of gears, harness and farm implements.

Mrs. Wolford and her son arrived home about 9:30. As she and son neared the top of the high hill on the Pe-mar road on which her cottage stands, they espied a bright light in the buggy shed attached to the barn. They hurried to the scene and found a very vigorous blaze lapping up the front door on the inside. They quickly procured buckets and by heroic efforts succeeded in quenching the flames. It was an exceedingly close call, as in another five minutes the whole barn would have been a roaring furnace of flame.
On closer examination they found that a pile of straw had been placed in front of the door on the inside and had been saturated with oil.

Mrs. Wolford has a very well grounded suspicion as to the guilty parties and believes they are the same scoundrels who robbed her chicken houses on a number of occasions in recent years. She is making a quiet investigation and feels hopeful of being able to run down the guilty parties.

VIOLENT ATTACKS HALTED BY ALLIES

Hold Lines in Face of Heavy Artillery Fire.

REPEL CHARGES OF TEUTONS

Heavy Losses Sustained by Invaders
In Attempt to Push Column Southward Along Coast.

London, Oct. 27.—Little progress was made by either the German or the allied armies on the western battle front which for weeks has extended from West Flanders, on the North sea, to beyond the Franco-Prussian border on the east.

According to advices from Paris the Germans have been unable to advance at any point, and have suffered heavy losses in their futile attempts to pierce the lines of the allies.

Repeated attempts to break through beyond Nieuport and Dixmunde have been successfully repulsed despite a violent bombardment which the invaders have directed against the two cities.

Further south the allies continue to hold their positions in the region between Ypres and Roulers. Between Armentieres and Lille, to the west of La Bassée and of Lens and to the east of Arras the Germans have made continuous efforts to drive the French from their positions between La Bassée and the Somme river, fighting of a particularly violent character having taken place to the west of Peronne, around which the attempts of the invading forces have been specially directed.

While the latest official advices from Paris are silent on this particular phase, a correspondent has telegraphed from Paris that there has been a general allied advance in the region between Nieuport and as well as to the east of Arras.

The official bulletins are as follows:

PARIS.

"In Belgium, Nieuport has been violently bombarded and the effort of the Germans has continued on the front between Nieuport and Dixmunde, without, according to the latest advices, any result whatever having been reached.

"All the front comprised between La Bassée and the Somme has been equally the object of violent attacks at night, all of which have been repulsed.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report.

"During Sunday our front along the general line between Nieuport and Dixmunde was maintained. The German forces which crossed the Yser between those two towns have not been able to progress.

"Our front was held also in the region between Ypres and Roulers, between Armentieres and Lille, to the west of La Bassée and of Lens, and to the east of Arras. This line is continued to the south by the line which already has been indicated by these official communications. During the fighting of recent days the enemy seems to have sustained considerable losses."

BERLIN.

"We crossed the Yser canal between Nieuport and Dixmunde, which is still occupied by the enemy; our troops attacked the hostile positions, which are obstinately defended.

"The British fleet co-operated, but was forced back by the heavy artillery fire. Three ships were hit. During the afternoon of Oct. 25 the fleet kept beyond the distance of sight.

"Near Ypres the battle is stagnant. Southwest of Ypres and west and southwest of Lille our attacks are progressing. During severe street fighting the English suffered great losses, leaving 500 prisoners.

"North of Arras a heavy French attack broke down, the French losses being severe.

"In the eastern theater of the war our offensive on Augustow is progressing. The battle near Ivangorod is favorable, but till now there has been no decision."

Dispatches from Amsterdam say that the Telegram of this city announces an improvement in the situation of the allies at Nieuport. The Paris correspondent of Reuters' Telegram company says late advices from the front indicate "a general allied advance in the region between Nieuport and Ypres, as well as to the east of Arras."

The Amsterdam Telegram learns that two 42-centimeter (17-inch) howitzers and ten 28-centimeter (11-inch) guns have arrived at Bruges. The Germans also have posted guns between Zeebrugge and Heyst (a Belgian seaside resort nine miles north of Bruges).

A correspondent of the Standard, telegraphing from Pas de Calais, declares: "The losses of the Germans along the line of the great battle in the north, victory in which would have given them an open road to Dunkirk and, perhaps, Calais, Boulogne and Abbeville, have been simply frightful. They have lost tens of thousands killed and wounded in the last week in that section alone of battle front. The starved and fagged rank and file, of which a large proportion are new men over fifty and boys under eighteen years of age, appear to be disheartened to the point of despair."

"The German troops as a whole, including the subordinate officers, have been deceived by Berlin and have been finding it out for weeks past. The troops in Belgium have been told they would be in Paris in three days or less, and even that Paris was only thirty or forty miles away.

"Midway between Lille and Nieuport the allies have pushed far forward, routing the Germans opposed to them.

"The plight of the Germans in the region around Dixmunde is terrible. By cutting the dykes the Belgians flooded thousands of acres, and it is stated that 5000 Germans have been drowned. In some of their trenches they have been fighting waist deep in water. Anywhere within six or seven miles of the coast they are exposed to the searching fire of the British warships.

"From Roulers the allies have dashed forward, constantly reinforced from the inexhaustible reserves of Great Britain and France, and there is already the beginning of a German panic.

"King Albert is with the Belgian field army within constant sound of the German cannon and is daily under fire himself, inspiring his troops with the courage of a patriot."

A dispatch from Sluis, Netherlands, to the Express says:

"All British subjects living in Belgium coast towns between Middelkerke and Knocke-sur-Mer were summarily expelled and sent to Holland on Saturday. This is the result of the issuance of a German proclamation at Ostend stating that British spies were directing the fire of the British warships."

NOBLEMEN EATING IN SOUP KITCHENS

7,000,000 People Face Starvation in Belgium.

Brussels, Oct. 27.—Nearly 7,000,000 of Belgium's 7,500,000 people now face famine unless they at once receive help from the outside.

The American minister to Belgium, Brand Whitlock, says that less than two weeks' supply of food remains in the cities, while conditions in the country districts are worse.

Although Germany has seized the food in some cities for her soldiers, she still disclaims responsibility for feeding the Belgians.

Mr. Whitlock has had on hand for two weeks only peasants' black bread, and the supply of that is short. One hundred soup kitchens are feeding more than 100,000 of the needy in Brussels.

Families formerly rich are bankrupt. Noblemen have been seen slipping into these soup kitchens. The supplies of coffee, tea, flour, rye and salt are practically exhausted.

Reports received by Minister Whitlock from Louvain, Liege and Namur say that the conditions in those cities are even worse than in Brussels.

VON MOLTKE RUMORED DYING

Prince Oscar, the Kaiser's Son, Also Reported Seriously Ill.

The Hague, Oct. 27.—It is learned from a semi-official source that Count Helmuth von Moltke, chief of the German general staff, is at death's door. He has been seriously ill for a fortnight, his sickness being aggravated by the failure of the general staff's military plans in France and the displeasure of the Kaiser.

General von Falkenhayn is acting chief of the general staff.

It is learned in Berlin that the German medical authorities attending Prince Oscar, the son of Emperor William, regard his recovery as very doubtful. The young prince is suffering from partial paralysis of the vagus nerve, and his brain has become affected. His condition is believed to have been caused by the shock of having all his officers killed by Turcos in fighting near the Meuse.

UNJUST TO CALL CARNEGIE NAMES

Lawyer Defends Iron Master
in Steel Trust Suit.

TRUCE WITH J. J. HILL

Pittsburgher Declares Carnegie Is Not a Conspirator and Was Glad to Get Out of Business.

Philadelphia, Oct. 27.—The government's announcement of a truce with the vast James J. Hill interests, heretofore involved among the defendants in the federal dissolution suit against the United States Steel corporation, came as an unexpected climax at the resumption of the argument in the United States circuit court of appeals and capped a sensation that saw thunderings and lightnings along the entire battle line.

Some further reason for the vastness of this attack transpired. This is the Clayton bill, the latest of the anti-trust legislation.

A clause in this provides that any federal decision against a combine will be considered prima facie evidence of guilt.

In other words, should the decision be against the steel trust in this suit, it would open the way for hundreds of suits against the steel corporation, that would be quite bothersome.

David A. Reed, one of the ablest of the corporation's lawyers, rose from the sorely beset trenches of the combine, lashed out with a passionate defense of Andrew Carnegie and filled the room with a challenge to the government that called the Laird O'Skibbe a conspirator.

"Under the arrangements made," said Mr. Reed, "Mr. Carnegie did not become a stockholder, but a creditor. He did not get one share of stock in the steel corporation, nor did he participate in the future of the corporation. He did not want any more money; he was tired of working for money. He wanted to get out of business to follow his philanthropic and altruistic motives."

Judge Reed said that while he was in J. Pierpont Morgan's office Mr. Carnegie called before he was to sail for Europe. Mr. Carnegie said: "I'm tired of all this commotion. Now, Pierpont, I am the happiest man in the world. I have unloaded this burden upon your back. I am off to Europe and play."

"He had a chance," eloquently argued Mr. Reed, "to be of service to his fellow man, and he rose to the occasion. The government charges him with being a prime mover in this alleged conspiracy. To call that man who has done so much for his race names that are commonly applied to wretched criminals in the dock is unfair, unjust and unworthy of the government."

More important if not so dramatic as his speech of defense was a declaration from the government attorney as to what, in the view of federal powers charged with the enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust law, American manufacturers should do with their overplus.

This question is at the very heart of most trust prosecutions, and business men have said it kept them awake at night. It is their defense for selling more cheaply in foreign than in home markets. They say such action is necessary. The steel combine has been a part of its defense on this plea.

"They should keep their overplus at home," said Henry E. Colton for the government, "and thus lower the prices in the home market. If they weren't pools and combinations such manufactures might be sold in the domestic markets as cheaply as they are sold in Europe. The overplus is largely a figure of speech. It is largely the product and the result of prohibitive prices in domestic markets." This was in answer to a direct line of questioning carried on by Judge Bullington.

Pennsy May Cut Wages.

Philadelphia, Oct. 27.—Upon the decision of the interstate commerce commission in the rehearing of the five per cent eastern rate case may hinge the future income of some 115,000 oficers and employees of the Pennsylvania railroad lines east of Pittsburgh. The question of a 10 per cent reduction in salaries right down the line from President Rea to the office boy has been whispered in railroad circles.

$30,000 Salary For Bank Head.

New York, Oct. 27.—Benjamin Strong, Jr., governor of the federal reserve bank in this city, which begins business Nov. 15, will receive an annual salary of $30,000. It was learned that Pierre Jay, chairman of the board and the bank's agent, will receive approximately $18,000.

RED BOOK MEXICO'S APOLOGY TO WORLD

Exposes Alleged Conspiracy to Oust Carranza.

Washington, Oct. 27.—The Mexican "Red Papers" are the latest addition to the publications of diplomacy.

While not bearing the official stamp of any of the Mexican factions, the little volume which made its appearance purports to contain official correspondence between Sarranza, Villa, Zapata, Villareal and others, being an "expose of the great Cientifico conspiracy to eliminate Don Venustiano Carranza."

Official reports received in Washington indicated that the Mexican national convention at Aguas Calientes would depose General Carranza as first chief and substitute a provisional president.

The war department received from Colonel Hatfield, commanding the American troops on the Arizona border, a message saying Governor Maytorena, of Sonora, was "slowly and reluctantly retreating and the Yaqui Indians were defiantly leaving Naco."

WAGON LOADS OF DEAD

German Losses in Fighting Around Ostend Reported as Frightful.

London, Oct. 27.—"The position on the coast is stationary," says a Daily Mail dispatch from Flushing, Netherlands, under date of Sunday.

"There is less firing and it is more to the southward. No alteration of the situation from Ostend is reported at this time.

"The German losses are frightful. Three meadows near Ostend are heaped with mud. The wounded are now installed in private houses in Bruges, where large wooden sheds are being rushed up to receive additional injured. Thirty-seven farm wagons, containing wounded, dead and dying, passed in one hour near Middelkerke.

"The Germans have been working at new entrenchments between Cor-sur-Mer and Wenduine to protect the road to Bruges."

All reports agree that the fighting in West Flanders has been terrible beyond any other during the war. Projectiles hurled from the land, the sea and the air are sweeping this unprotected country, destroying villages and searching out the terror-stricken inhabitants who delayed too long in getting out of the line of fire.

LITTLE STORIES OF HAPPENINGS IN FIELD OF WAR IN EUROPE

Humanity Makes Brothers of Foes When Lull Falls on Strife.

Officials Gone, Woman Takes Over Government of French City.

FRENCH newspapers, says a recent dispatch from Europe, are not averse to relating stories of German acts of kindness to the enemies of the kaiser. Here is one going the rounds in France: A French reservist named Aubrey was wounded by a shell near Nanteuille-Haudouin. He was found the following morning lying helpless in a field by a German patrol. The Germans rushed upon him with fixed bayonets, but Aubrey, fearing that his last hour had come, pleaded with one gray-headed German soldier and tried to show him by pantomime that he had a wife and children. "You husband and father?" asked the German in bad French. "Yes," was the reply. "I grandfather; have five sons in army," said the German, who thereupon carefully bandaged his French comrade's wound. Then the guns began to thunder and the Germans retired, leaving Aubrey to be found soon afterward by a French patrol.

Soldiers' Marriages Encouraged.

Aroused by steps taken by Germany and Austria to protect themselves against a falling birth rate and the death rate incidental to the war, England continues to encourage marriage of recruits soon to go on foreign service. At the suggestion of the archbishop of Canterbury, as has probably already been known in America, the diocesan Bishops of the Church of England have made marked decreases in the fees charged soldiers for marriage licenses and clergymen throughout the island are waiving their personal fees.

In Germany and Austria fees for marriages were waived entirely, and in many cities clergymen married the warriors and their sweethearts in large companies.

Gold wedding rings were done away with and iron rings substituted for the ceremony. Then the married women who already had gold wedding rings offered them as contributions to the war fund and replaced them with rings similar to those worn by the war brides.

The archbishop of Canterbury is endeavoring to have the government waive the stamp fee of $2.50 which it imposes on each marriage certificate, and diocesan bishops have reduced the marriage license fee to $2.50 in the case of soldiers and sailors of limited means.

Formerly it cost $10 to procure a marriage license properly stamped by the government. The cost is now $5, and the archbishop of Canterbury hopes to have it lowered to $2.50.

Nearly half a million recruits are quartered in camps scattered through out England. This new army of Kitchener's probably will not be sent to the continent for at least six months.

Many weddings are occurring daily at the various camps, and new recruits and their sweethearts are often much distressed to find that under the English law one of the parties to a marriage must have resided in the parish in which they are married for at least fifteen days. The archbishop of Canterbury has suggested that this obstacle be removed by statute.

Woman Runs French City.

In Soissons, while shells from opposing French and German batteries crashed over the rooftops, whistling singularly like the air brakes of a train, Mme. Jeanne Watteau Macherez, a heroine of the war, took charge of the city, ran the hospitals, supervised sanitation, street cleaning and, in fact, everything. The civic authorities had left.

"The Germans were making a determined attack on the town as we talked," says a correspondent. "I timed thirty-seven shells in one minute. Mme. Macherez stood in the middle of the street, and although her words were sometimes lost in the noise of exploding shells, she went right on. "If the Germans get back into the city this time," I asked, "are you going to stay?"

"I shall be all the more needed if they come back," Mme. Macherez replied. "When they came the first time how did they behave?"

"They wanted an indemnity from us, but I induced the commander to accompany me about the city to prove to him that he was asking too much. I convinced him that we could give no more than we had."

"This was Mme. Macherez's modest way of putting it, but I had learned how, by infinite tact, she had resisted the demand for tons of foodstuffs, tobacco and great quantities of wines and finally had secured better terms."

Germany Loses Chief Bandmaster.

The London Chronicle's correspondent at Calais says one of the most curious captures of the war was made in the neighborhood of Ypres when the bandmaster in chief of the German army was taken. A good deal of doubt at first surrounded the identity of the much decorated individual in his gorgeous uniform.

He carried a gold mounted baton, and his store of music also fell into the hands of his captors.

It was on the outskirts of Ypres that a number of soldiers came upon this imposing functionary seated, disconsolately and deserted, on a tree stump by the wayside endeavoring to tie up with his handkerchief a slight wound in his right hand. He was surrounded and informed that he was a prisoner. This increased his dejection, and he said that he had lost his band.

The bandmaster in chief was marched off, but before night fell he made an effort to escape. Though he may know a great deal about music, he proved a child in the matter of endeavoring to elude his captors, so the bandmaster in chief of the German army remains a gloomy prisoner.

Prayed For His Dead Leader.

"There is one picture I will never forget," says a German lieutenant's letter in the Cologne Gazette. "We shot down a patrol of chasseurs. Two men who were in cover were taken prisoners. When the skirmish was over I went with one of the chasseurs to where the officer in charge of the patrol had fallen.

"I saw immediately that the man had died from a shot through the heart. But the chasseur who accompanied me and who evidently was very fond of the officer asked me, with great concern in his voice:

"Does my officer live?"

"I shook my head, saying, 'No; he is dead!'"

"And then a very touching thing occurred. The soldier fell to his knees beside the dead officer and prayed for a long time—a gripping picture. On the ground, in a flood of sunlight, lay four dead horses. My men stood about them in a ring, and in this circle rested the dead officer with the private praying at his side. We were silent. The silence of death was upon us, but through it we heard the steps of Death, who may gather us tomorrow."

Soldiers "Joke" Their Captain.

It is good to march with a French regiment along the roads as they are now marching, says a London Chronicle correspondent.

The regiment marches silently. They have come a long way down the straight roads between the hills, and there is dust in their eyes and throats, and they have arrived at that moment in the march when the pack weighs heaviest, when the shoulder straps begin to rub, when the rifle seems to wear a hole in the shoulder and when the shoe begins to pinch—an ugly moment, when black devils poke up their heads in men's hearts.

But the best hearted man in the regiment knows that it is the time for a little joke. He begins to speak about his captain, who is walking a yard away from him.

"Our captain grows a little fat, I think, my little ones."

"Yes," says a comrade, taking up the joke. "It is possible that he has been eating too much."

"And he has a great thirst, I am told," says a third man. "It is marvelous what a thirst our captain has. Three bottles of red wine are hardly enough to wet his throat."

"He gets too old for war."

And so the joke goes on, every word of which is heard by the captain, who finally bursts into laughter and says: "You are impudent rascals, all of you."

The bad moment has passed. The weight of the pack is forgotten, and presently the baritone of the regiment sings the first line of a marching song. The chorus goes lifting down the long white road between the poplar sentinels.

Thought He Had the Kaiser.

The Cossack patrols flitting along the German front are the subject of innumerable stories.

When the news was issued that the kaiser had come east to take command of his army on the Russo-German front the Cossacks were much interested. One day a Cossack came in driving before him a plump, distressed Prussian captain, whom he had gleaned during a day's work. "I've got him," he announced. "I knew him by his mustache," and he produced an old picture postcard showing Kaiser Wilhelm, whose mustache the prisoner captain had evidently imitated.

Grewsome Sight on Battlefield.

A correspondent sends the following vivid description of the battlefield of the Marne:

"In a large hole rolls and gasps a soldier, his body shaken, his hands gripping tufts of grass. . . . I take him under the armpits and turn him over to an easier position. But a flood rushes to the ground; little by little his life oozes away and at last he dies. Hastily I cover him with his great coat. . . . Near by a wounded man regards the scene with eyes of madness and reaches out to me a hand ravaged by gangrene.

"As I look over the thousands of black spots prone on the yellow grass I know that I am looking at the soldiers who will never hear the great fanfare of victory—obscure heroes whose names will never be published."

"I think of the wives, the sweet hearts, the mothers and the children who will thirst for revenge because on one beautiful autumn afternoon the blood of their fathers was shed."

Peace and War.

It hath been said that an unjust peace is to be preferred before a just war.—S. Butler.

STEADY WORK TO WIN THE PRIZES

Because there is no Extra Inducement in Subscriptions this Week is no Reason why Anyone Can Afford to Cease in their Efforts.

Because the big special offer is over and because there is no extra inducement for contestants to work for, some of them seem to think that it is time to take a little vacation and to wait until something else turns up. This is an idea that will defeat anyone who follows it out. Because there are no extra votes allowed on subscriptions now, does not make this week any less important than last week. In fact the time is so much shorter that it will take even more work than ever to keep in the race and to hold the place that was gained during the special offer. All of the extra votes that a contestant may have secured last week will be of no use unless they make this week count at least as much as the last one in the number of subscriptions that they get.

This is no time for a rest, and anyone who thinks it is will only lose the position that they have gained and drop behind the leaders. And once behind it will be a very hard matter to again come up, and especially as the contest draws toward the close.

Do not figure on a spurt at the very end to place yourself in a winning position. It will require much more than anyone would imagine and from all indications will be most impossible. Make every day count. Keep continually plugging away and in the end you will be among the leaders, and then whatever extra you may make the last days count will serve to put you ahead instead of bringing you back to a position that you have lost by resting in the middle of the contest.

Medical Advertising Rheumatism Soon Becomes Chronic

The Result of Tired Kidneys Failing to Expel Poisonous Waste Matter.

Tired, overworked kidneys allow poisonous uric acid to remain in the blood instead of expelling it from the system. That is the cause of chronic rheumatism. The disease gets into some joint or group of muscles and settles there, and only strenuous treatment will dislodge it.

Rheumatism softens the uric acid crystals lodged in the joints and muscles, causing the terrible pains, and passes them out of the system through the kidneys and bowels.

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. Unless it is pure the organs become diseased. Rheuma purifies the blood and the kidneys, then regains their natural activity.

People's Drug Store and all druggists sell Rheuma at a price so inexpensive that it is folly to be without it.

Childish Wrong-Doing.

A child should never be regarded as a criminal, but as a victim of crime. No child can create his own environment. Boys have often been punished for wrong-doing when it would be just about as sensible to whip a child for having diphtheria or typhoid.

CHAPTER V.

My Ride to the Flying U.

In Montana, with the mountains on one side and the valley on the other—the valley in which lay my brother's ranch, the Flying U—the train was speeding toward the railroad town at which I was to detrain. A whistle blew—and oh, how excited I became! I was now, in a moment, to meet the hero of my dreams, the tall, bronzed-faced man of my fancy, the scion and heir of the Bennett millions, the darling of the heart of my first patient, Mrs. Bennett.

The train stopped. I alighted with my suitcase. I looked about for Chip. But no tall, bronzed-faced man appeared. There appeared only two persons. These two persons seemed to be the sole inhabitants of Montana.

One of these two persons was dressed like a Montana station agent—with a gun. The other was a boy dressed like a Montana boy—with a gun. To these two gunmen I addressed this remark:

"I am Doctor Della Whitmore!"

"Hully Gee!" cried the boy. "It's the abe doctor."

"Smokes!" cried the station agent. "It's you. Say, we—all in our midst unanimous thought you was—well, excuse me, did you say your name was Dr. Della Whitmore?"

"Yes!" I snapped with asperity. "Where's Foreman Chip?"

"Kid," said the station agent, "beat it over to the Red Dog saloon and tell Chip the dame has come."

The boy "beat it."

"Chip's over to the Red Dog drinking sarsaparilla, miss," the agent volunteered. He seemed to put particular stress on that soft drink word, sarsaparilla.

"Humph!" I grunted. I had never heard anyone use the word "Humph!" outside of novels, until I heard Mr. Bennett, Sr., the banker, use it repeatedly whenever his wife or I spoke of his son as so successful in his ranch career. "Humph!" the elder Bennett would always grunt at such time, as if in utter disgust, yet with a sly, furtive note of satisfaction and secret paternal love in his tone.

So now I grunted "Humph!" in that same way of disgust, yet I'm sure with that same secret note of satisfaction—satisfaction at learning that Chip drank only sarsaparilla.

And now, the boy returned. And behind him came—yes, I was sure it was the Chip of my dreams, too. My dreams had been prophetic. He was tall—and he was bronzed-faced—and he had a fine Roman nose and came-out features—and the long tapering hand of an artist, even though he was dressed in the latest fashion of Montana chaparreros and wide brimmed sombrero and a red bandanna knotted picturesquely about his open-shirted throat.

"Mr. Chip," I said, to place him at his ease, "I hope you are none the worse for your sarsaparilla."

You never saw such a look of surprise and consternation on any man's face as I saw on Chip's face when he first beheld the "old mad maid doctor." He was looking for a putty-faced, flat chested, low heeled, sour visaged lady of uncertain years and a professional pair of spectacles covering her sunken eyes on a face sickled over with the pale cast of thought. Of that I was certain.

Chip is Made Foreman.

But I must confess that Chip was a good actor. After his first involuntary start of astonishment, he never again, from that moment onward, showed the least surprise at my youth or my French heels or my radiant face or my non-spectacled blue eyes that looked so directly into his, hoping to disconcert him.

Yes, from the very first, I tried to tease this man Chip. I wanted to get square with him for thinking of Jack's sister—his boss' sister—as an old maid. Secondly, and more important, I wanted to punish him dreadfully for the many hours I had wasted on him, dreaming of him as my hero and keeping secret from Mrs. Bennett the fact that her son was employed by my brother. So that's why, now, I referred so pointedly to his sarsaparilla.

"It would be a good thing, Doctor Whitmore," he replied, with studied politeness, "if women doctors the country over would recommend sarsaparilla for their patients instead of brandy or whiskey. Sarsaparilla is insurance against impoliteness. And that's more than I can say for the stronger stuff."

"Is that a rebuke or professional advice?" I asked, trying my best not to smile.

"Give me those bags," replied Chip, ignoring me, and addressing the station agent with the gun and the boy with the gun. And with his mighty arms, Chip flung my trunk up on the buckboard as if it were indeed itself a mere chip.

And so he said "Git app!" to the horses and we started for the ranch, I sitting close beside him, with my French heels well in view and the feathers on my hat tickling him every time that buckboard gave a lurch on the uncertain highway that led to the Flying U.

Did Chip talk? Not so's you'd notice it. He had evidently contracted the habit of silence from the all-surrounding hills. Laconic was no name for it. Every time I addressed a remark to him he would reply "Yes!" or he would reply "No!"

Finally, when we were about half way, however, I espied an animal such as I had never seen before, but which looked to me like a dog. This animal sped swiftly across the road in front of us.

"Look at the dog!" I cried. "Those dog is that?"

"Humph!" he grunted, just like his august and millioned father. "That's a coyote."

"Yes. Dog family—but no good. See that gun back there! I took a shot at a coyote on my way out—but missed him."

"Oh, so you're not a crack shot!" I said, sweetly. "I supposed all real cowboys were sharpshooters and could shoot an eye out of a coyote with the rifle at the hip."

Just then he stopped the horses. "Look!" he cried, somewhat excited. "There's that coyote now! See him in there—look!—in the sage brush—standing still and gazing at us. I'm going to try my luck again."

"Don't," I said. "Your lucky day isn't just now. Give me that rifle."

He viewed me in a dazed way as if to ask what I, a city girl, could possibly know about a rifle in conjunction with a coyote.

You never saw such a look of wonderment and distress on the face of a human being as was on Chip's face now as I took the rifle, sighted it, fired—and hit that coyote.

"Doggone me! If you haven't potted him!" he exclaimed, and for the first time Mr. Claude Bennett descended to look me straight in my blue eyes in admiration and esteem.

I had gone up about forty notches in his estimation and I knew it. He let me see that very plainly. I had shot and killed a coyote at a hundred paces—and that's more than Mr. Claude Bennett had done that day. Hence his abject admiration now as he sprang from the wagon and went and got that dead coyote and put it in the buckboard.

"I must show that to the boys," he said, thoughtfully.

"Why?" I asked. "Why show it to the boys in particular. Why not show it to my brother?"

"Just because," he replied, just like a woman.

"Because what?" I insisted.

"I'm glad you shot that coyote," he said, evasively.

"Why glad?" I persisted.

"Well, confound it! If you must know, Doctor Whitmore, I'm glad you shot that coyote because it will make you hep with the boys."

And again he looked me square in the eye and I could see now that he was not so sure of himself as he had been before that coyote met his untimely end. His armor of opposition to having a woman on the ranch was growing momentarily so thin that I could now, I was sure, push my finger through it and rip it all off.

"You're some skirt, believe me!" he said. "I'm doggone proud, Doctor Whitmore, to have the honor of driving you and your baggage to the Flying U and to express the hope that you will remain in our midst indefinitely."

"A few days only," I replied, seeing his face fall at once. "Only a few days. I have already noted the adverse winds that blow on this mesa. And as I'm the shorn lamb, I think of going speedily away from this region to where the winds are tempered to such as I. I thank you, however, for your desire that I continue with you indefinitely."

His face was now two yards long and he forgot to whip the off horse which was lagging lazily. The battle was on between Dr. Della Whitmore and Chip of the Flying U.

CHAPTER VI.

My Life is Saved by Chip.

Now it came to pass that when we were approaching the Flying U headquarters house, something happened which would have shocked the nerves of any girl fresh from the city, except yours truly, Dr. Della Whitmore.

We were riding along a ridge. Down below, at a clump of trees, I beheld a mad lot of riders arriving at a certain cottonwood with a man whom they were going to hang. Chip looked, too, And, did I fancy I saw a smile curving his lips—or was it just simply the natural smile that seemed always to lurk about his mobile mouth?

Anyway, it was the suspicion that he smiled, that made me take philosophically all that my blue eyes now beheld. Instead of crying out in horror and dismay and making a scene—as I learned afterward I was expected to do—I merely kept a closed mouth.

I saw three wild men on the cayuses at the cottonwood put a rope around the neck of the man on the horse and prepare to hang him. It certainly was a critical moment for the man with the rope around his throat. But upon closer inspection, I saw the trick. This whole scene had been planned especially for my benefit, that was quite obvious. For I now perceived—so good were my eyes—that the man to be hanged was not a man at all, but only a dummy, an effigy.

What spoiled their farce for my benefit more than anything else, however, was that now the horse carrying the effigy bolted. Yes, that horse was running away. The runaway sped up the incline and was coming along the road directly toward us. There was no room for this flying cayuse to pass us with the floundering effigy strapped on his back and flinging itself wildly from side to side of the road. The runaway horse would run right onto us—right into our buckboard and would undoubtedly scare our own horses so that we would have a double runaway on our own hands and perhaps be killed before ever my brother could welcome me after our four years' separation.

What did Chip do? Chip was right there with presence of mind. He wheeled our horses and plunged pell mell down the steepest embankment in the whole world. And he started rolling down that awful steep embankment not a moment too soon, either. For just as we got safely off the narrow road above, the runaway horse with the effigy shot past. An accident had been averted only by a hair's breadth.

On down that fearsome precipice we careened in the buckboard, the horses scarcely able to hold the vehicle—our wheels rolling over boulders and shooting us way up in the air first on the right, then on the left, precipitating me bodily again and again into the stalwart arms of one Chip, and flinging him bodily again and again athwart my lap, so that at times it seemed as if the natural law of gravitation itself was being helped, by this wild fierce ride down the precipice, to literally "throw" us together.

At last we reached the bottom, however. My hair was all down. My jacket was all mussed up. And Chip looked actually pale.

Even in that delightful moment when everybody should give thanks to their Creator for the sparing of life and limb, I could not forbear to tease the grumpy Chip. So I never for a second let him see that I understood that he had saved my very life and that henceforth, as they say in novels, I owed my life to this hero. No, what I said to him, was this:

"You were just trying to frighten me, weren't you—riding down that terrible place like that?"

He took a long while to reply, but at last he said:

"Yes, I was just simply initiating you into the ways of the Woolly West. We often have to take rides like that just to give the horses exercise. And I thought now as good a time as any to give these horses a little extra work to keep them in condition. See?"

"I see," I replied. "And now, shall we go back to the road—or shall we join your friends down there who seemed so sad at the escape of the victim they were going to hang? Some horse thief, I suppose."

"Oh no!" he replied. "Merely a man who had turned a handspring in church, that's all. We hang a man for less than that out here—I suppose the New York humorous weeklies have told you all about us in that respect, eh?"

But for some reason best known to themselves, the "hanging party" now scurried off, seemingly none too anxious to meet the buckboard and the "old maid doctor."

All Around The Farm

SHADE FOR THE FARMHOUSE.

Trees Are Necessary Both For Beauty and Comfort's Sake.

(Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

The importance of shade trees around the farmhouse is much too generally overlooked in the opinion of specialists in the United States department of agriculture. In selecting the site for a farmhouse, they say, it is always well when possible to choose one where shade is already to be had. If this is not possible, with the expenditure of a little time and trouble, the farmer can plant trees which in a few years will add greatly to the comfort and appearance of his home. No matter how well designed and built a house may be, if it is left entirely exposed to the sun and devoid of any setting of foliage it will not be really attractive.

There are, moreover, sound, practical reasons for planting shade trees. Two or three elms or maples, for instance, judiciously placed will lower the temperature of the house many degrees and add greatly to the comfort of the housewife. Today the progressive farmer is thoroughly aware of the financial benefit he derives from seeing to the physical comfort of his livestock. It is equally true that if his man beings are comfortable they will do more work and do it better. A hot summer day spent in the kitchen is at best an ordeal for the woman who must wash, iron and cook for a large household. If the kitchen is thoroughly screened from the sun's rays her discomfort can be very materially lessened.

There are, moreover, many household tasks which could be performed with equal convenience and much less fatigue in the fresh air if a cool, shady spot were readily accessible. Children are, of course, much better off out of doors than in, and the mother will find it much easier to keep them under her eye if it is possible for her to be herself, a part of the day at least, out of the house.

From a purely financial point of view it will be found that a well shaded property invariably brings a better price than one bare of all trees and shrubs. From this point of view the planting of trees may be regarded as a sound business investment and one which few property owners can afford to neglect. Men experienced in farm sales know that an attractive setting of foliage will frequently sell a farmhouse when such obvious advantages as good land and water fail to secure a purchaser.

In building a farmhouse it is, of course, desirable wherever possible to take advantage of what trees there may be already on the property. When this is not possible, however, young ones should be planted at the earliest possible moment. In most sections of the country poplars and maples will bring the quickest results. It is therefore a good idea to plant these first and to follow them with other and more enduring kinds, such as the elm or oak. In general it may be said that the faster a tree grows the shorter is its life, and the property owner who confines himself to quick growing trees may well find that he has outlived his shade. Fruit trees should, of course, be planted too, but these do not answer the purpose of shading the house, since it is desirable to keep them trimmed low in order to facilitate spraying and gathering of the fruit.

The choice of trees to be planted depends in a great measure upon the section of the country. Where native trees are abundant it is perhaps best to select those which can be most readily obtained from the surrounding country. On the other hand, in the sections where young trees are not to be had it is well for the property owner to consider carefully what kinds are most likely to thrive. The red oak is a very satisfactory tree and does well over a large area. It is comparatively rapid in growth, but, on the other hand, is much longer lived than many others which share this advantage. Evergreens do not, of course, give as much shade as deciduous trees, whose foliage is confined to the summer. On the other hand, a grove of evergreens is distinctly ornamental and is most useful in the winter as a wind screen. The value of wind screens in practical agriculture has recently attracted considerable scientific attention, but it does not need a specialist to appreciate the usefulness of such a screen in promoting the comfort of a household.

INVASION OF POLAND HALTED

Austro-Germans Continue Flight From Warsaw.

CLAIM VICTORY IN GALICIA

Vienna Reports Czar Has Shifted His Main Army to Combat Advance of Austrians.

Petrograd, Oct. 27.—The German and Austrian invasion of Poland has been checked, it has been officially announced, here.

The Germans are using the Austrians to cover their retreat. They have been driven back fifty miles from the Vistula. In Galicia the Austrians have failed in their attempt to turn the Russian left flank. The official statement reads:

"The German and Austrian invasion of Poland has been definitely checked. The German and Austrian advance on the Vistula and San rivers also has been stopped.

"The Germans have been driven back fifty miles from the Vistula, and are being closely pursued by our troops.

(It is believed that the Germans are falling back in the hope of reaching their well-fortified, long-prepared positions along the Warta river, which still are fifty-three miles in their rear.)

In Galicia the Austrians have been defeated in their attempt to turn the extreme Russian left. The Austrians are able only to parley the Russian attacks here and there. They are beginning to fall back.

A great battle is now raging near Yedlinski, north of Radom, in southern Poland.

The Austro-German army, commanded by the king of Saxony, is making a stand behind lines of trenches thrown up three weeks ago. There is no official report on the battle, but it is confirmed at the ministry of war that the combat is of great proportions and has not yet been decided.

The Saxons composed the right wing of the German host which was defeated along the Vistula from Oct. 14 to Oct. 18. The strength of the army is estimated at 300,000 and the Russians are attacking with probably 500,000.

There is no official and little informal news from Eastern Prussia, where it appears that the Russian and German armies have reached a deadlock which can only be broken by the result in Poland.

Big Battle on Galician Border.

Vienna, Oct. 27.—Russia has sent strong reinforcements to the army opposing the Austro-German forces in Galicia and southwestern Poland, according to an official announcement by the war office. The statement follows:

"Austrian and German forces have taken up a position in a nearly uninterrupted line from the northern spurs of the Carpathians by the way of Stryl and Sambor by the fortress of Przemyśl, to the Polish part of the Vistula river and to the district of Piek. This force is opposing the main army of the Russians, which has been heavily reinforced by troops from the Caucasus, Siberia and Turkestan.

"The Austrian offensive movement across the Carpathians attracted strong hostile forces.

"In the middle of Galicia, where both armies occupy fortified positions the battle is stagnant.

"Northeast of Przemyśl and on the lower San the Austrians have had several successes.

"In Russian Poland strong forces are facing each other and since Saturday there has been fighting north of the Vistula, Ivangorod and near Warsaw."

Servians Repulse Austria.

Nish, Serbia, Oct. 27.—The Austrian attacks along the Bosnian front have been repulsed, it is stated by the Serbian war office. The following announcement was given out:

"During recent fighting the whole Austrian army in Bosnia was repulsed with heavy losses. An Austrian monitor struck a mine near Skelania Ada and sank. A motor launch saved the crew."

(The Austrian monitor is probably the same vessel referred to in dispatches last week.)

Turks Get German Submarines.

Athens, Oct. 27.—A semi-official dispatch from Constantinople states that German has succeeded in transporting two submarines by rail to Turkey. They will be put into commission as soon as possible and be offered by Germans.

Allies Men O' War Patrol Pacific.

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 27.—The Japanese cruiser Idzumo and the British cruiser New Castle, which have been cruising in Mexican waters in search of the German cruisers Leipzig and Nürnberg, returned to the Esquimalt B. C. naval base for coal.

Japanese Diet to Convene Dec. 5.

Tokyo, Oct. 27.—Official announcement was made that the diet will convene on Dec. 5.

MRS. CARMAN FREED UNDER $25,000 BAIL

Woman Accused of Bailey Murder Returns Home.

New York, Oct. 27.—Mrs. Florence Conklin Carman, who was on trial in Mineola, L. I., all last week for the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey, was released on $25,000 bail by Justice Charles H. Kelly in the Kings county supreme court in Brooklyn.

The trial ended with the jury unable to agree on a verdict. Accompanied by her lawyers, Mrs. Carman started immediately for her home in Freeport.

Mrs. Carman was whisked out of Mineola in a motor car, accompanied by Sheriff Pettit, of Nassau county. Dr. Edwin Carman, husband of the accused woman, remained at his home.

Mrs. Carman's bail bond was signed by Smith Cox and Earnest Randall, two friends of the Carman family in Freeport.

Upon her arrival at her home in Freeport, Mrs. Carman was welcomed by her husband and daughter.

"I am so glad to get home that I don't know what to do," declared Mrs. Carman.

As Mrs. Carman was being removed from the Mineola jail, District Attorney Smith, of Nassau county, was making the following statement:

"I am convinced that Mrs. Carman had nothing to do with the questionable events which are reported to have taken place in the jury room, and I see no reason why she should not be liberated on $25,000 bail."

"I think, however, she ought to be tried a second time, and I think she wants another trial."

CHINA DEMANDS VESSEL

Peking, Oct. 27.—The Chinese foreign minister has demanded the surrender of a Japanese torpedo boat, with its crew, which entered Chinese waters and substituted the Japanese flag for the Chinese dragon and attempted to tow away the wrecked German torpedo boat S-90.

An Austrian cruiser has been sunk in Kiao-Chau bay by heavy Japanese artillery, according to a report in government circles.

It measures four seven inches in height and is over twenty-five feet in circumference.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

APPLES FOR DESSERT.

THE aromatic quality of autumn fruits particularly adapts them to the making of cooked desserts. Like those of apples, suggested here.

Apple Meringue.—Take two cupfuls apples, steamed till tender. Mash fine, add one-half cupful sugar, one teaspoonful butter and one-half teaspoonful cinnamon. When cool add two well beaten egg yolks. Fill a deep pie plate and bake without upper crust. When done cover with meringue made from egg whites and brown slightly.

Delicious Foods.

Green Apple Dessert.—Take tart apples, mix one-half glass of red currant jelly or any tart red jelly with three-fourths of a cupful of boiling water and when it is dissolved add one pound of granulated sugar and the grated rind, also the juice, of one lemon. Let it boil three minutes in a saucepan. Then put in eight apples pared and cored, simmer gently until the apples are transparent; then lift them into a glass dish. Let the sirup boil five minutes, and when partially cooled it should be clear, light red jelly.

Made With Gelatin.

Apples With Jelly.—Take six apples and core them. Put two cloves into each apple and as much granulated sugar as it will hold. Place them in a baking pan without touching, and add a cupful of water or more, as you think fit. Try to keep them from breaking. When done take out carefully and place in dish. Strain the sirup they were cooked in and put in another saucepan with a little dissolved gelatin and a few drops of red coloring. Boil till clear and then put around apples. Set away to cool till supper time.

Delicious For Luncheon.

Jellied Apples.—Pare six or eight apples, core them and put parings and cores and three or four more apples cut up in pieces on to cook with water enough to cover. Put your pared and cored apples in steamer and steam until cooked through, then lift them carefully into a dish. When the parings, etc., are sufficiently cooked drain same as any jelly, put back on stove, let boil ten minutes, then add sugar to taste and cook the same as you do any jelly. When ready pour over the apples and put aside to get chilled. These are nice for lunch with cream.

TO DESTROY CUTWORMS.

Thousands of gardeners and tobacco growers stand helpless in the presence of the cutworm, when a little effort would solve the difficulty. Poisoned bait will do the trick. Green clover cut up and sprayed with arsenate of lead will get them if scattered over the ground. So will a mixture of paris green and bran made into a mash and left in small balls where the worms will find it. Fall plowing is a good preventive. — Farm and Fireside.

Cornmeal Pancakes.

Two cupfuls flour, one-half cupful cornmeal, one and one-half tablespoonfuls baking powder, one and one-half teaspoonfuls salt, one-third cupful sugar, one and one-half cupfuls boiling water, one and one-quarter cupfuls milk, an egg. Add meal to boiling water and boil five minutes, turn into bowl, add milk and remaining dry ingredients mixed and sifted, then the egg well beaten and butter. Cook on a greased griddle.

Why She Prized It.

At a whilst party an unmarried lady won a consolation prize which proved to be a small dressed doll in male attire. Unwrapping the toy, the donor discovered that the head had been broken off.

"Never mind!" exclaimed the recipient, good naturedly. "I will prize it all the more on that account. It's the first man that ever lost his head over me in all my life."

Sudden End.

"What's Red Face?" asked Four Finger Hogan in the hotel bar at Tin Can. "I haven't seen Red Face around for some time."

A general laugh went up. Then Shotgun Simpson shook his head and said:

"Poor Red Face! He got loaded the other night, rode into Cemetery Gulch, stuck his head in the window of the Crimson Arms hotel and yelled, 'Fire!' 'Everybody did.'—Exchange.

In the treatment of the various forms of irritable skin, such as Acne, Ringworm, Salt, While not always establishing a permanent cure, yet in every instance it takes the place of bold-sulphur cream, instantly stops the agonizing itching.

A Refugee

By EUNICE BLAKE

My sister Rose and I were both girls of a keen sensibility. We were inseparable, and often when together Rose would mention something that I was thinking about, or perhaps it was I who would mention something that Rose was thinking about. For a long while we considered this thinking about the same thing at the same time simply due to coincidence, but at last we came to wonder if it were not thought transference.

When this solution was first suggested we both laughed at the idea, but after a few more very pointed coincidences of the kind we believed it to be true.

Our first separation occurred in the spring of the breaking out of the war between the triple alliance and the triple entente. Rose found an opportunity to go abroad with a party of friends, who took her along as their guest. With much reluctance at leaving me she accepted the invitation and sailed when the annual summer regatta of Americans commenced. During the month of July 1, who needed rest instead of the excitement of travel, went into the country as far as I could get from a railroad and where the only newspaper was a weekly journal with no news in it except what was of interest to the surrounding farmers.

One night I dreamed that I was in a foreign city. I say I dreamed it, for my consciousness was more like a dream than any other sensation. I was in a hotel situated on a square. I looked out through a window on the square below, thronged with people all in a state of intense excitement. Some of them were throwing up their caps and shouting, others were hurrying in and out of the houses, while cab drivers were guiding their horses or auto cars were endeavoring to get through the crowds without running persons down.

Then without being conscious of any transition I was on a railway train. Every town it passed through was filled with soldiers, and everybody seemed to be bent on doing something in the least possible time. In the fields women were gathering in the harvest, not a man being there to help. Mules were dragging great cannon along roads, and locomotives were drawing other munitions of war on platform cars. Everybody and everything was moving in the direction our train was moving.

By and by we passed into another country. There were long drawn breaths of relief by my fellow passengers. We were in a valley on one side of which loomed fortifications into which soldiers were hurrying. There were two lines of these works, and they extended about a city, almost encircling it. These two lines were so filled with men that in the distance they looked like myriads of insects.

Our train entered the city, and I, with others, was hurried to another train. Soon I was again flying across the country. Now the people instead of hurrying in the direction I was going hurried in the other direction. Soldiers were marching in great multitudes on the road, and presently I saw some bearing the English flag. There seemed to be less worry on the part of all of us, our only course of anxiety being to catch a steamer, which was to sail from a coast we were approaching.

The next phase of this sensation was running through a fog on the ocean without lights and without a sound to indicate our presence. None of us slept, and most of us were in the cabin grouped in terror. Stewards were going from room to room stuffing pillows against the portholes or hanging curtains over them to conceal from within out every ray of light.

My dream, my vision or whatever it may be called faded away. In the morning I awoke feeling as if I had been flayed. In dreams we never see anything we have not seen while awake. I had seen sights that were absolutely new to me. I could not understand it. Naturally I connected it with something that had happened to Rose abroad.

So impressed with this was I that I determined to go to the city. I was driven twenty miles to a station. Along the route the country people were pursuing their daily vocations, some of them getting in hay, others moving leisurely over the roads. When I arrived at the station I saw a man standing on the platform reading a newspaper. I saw in big black letters running across the page:

"The Belgians Still Hold the Forts at Liege"

I asked him what it meant, and he told me that all Europe had suddenly burst into a war flame. I bought a newspaper and read an announcement of the arrival of a ship at New York from Antwerp bringing American passengers from Europe, some of whom had left Germany on the last train that was allowed to come through. I wondered if Rose had not made her escape from Munich, where she was when I had last heard from her, and come out on that train.

I reached home in the evening. As I went up the steps the front door was opened, and out rushed Rose, and, throwing her arms about me, she exclaimed:

"I have escaped; but, oh, what a harrowing experience!"

When I told her of my dream, giving her such impressions of scenes that were vivid, she told me that I had gone through in my dream what she had gone through in reality.

"The Family Car"

Oct. 27—For Children's Day" on Belle Isle more than 20,000 Detroit youngsters were recently transported across the great bridge that connects the city with its unique island-park. For this considerable task about 1,000 motor car owners of Detroit offered their services. Of these 2,000 cars about 1,300 were Fords. A noticeable feature was the absence of the big "high-priced" cars. Perhaps the owners of the "high-priced" cars were too busy to think of the youngsters' playday or the needs of the youngsters, several hundreds of whom were orphans. But Ford owners who have children, and love children, turned out in mass. They not only took the children to the picnic, but they came back for them when the shadows were beginning to lengthen and the "sandman's" approach was evident.

The venerable guardian of the Belle Isle bridge offers some interesting comments on the phenomenon.

"That's nothing," he said. "There's always kids in a Ford crossing this bridge. The big, expensive cars go pretty light most always—a swell lady and a chauffeur and maybe an Irish terrier with a gold collar—that's generally the cargo, all solemn and dignified. But then Ford's is always full of family and lunch-baskets and laughing kids and generally they come back and get another load. I guess it's because Ford families stick together more in their fun and—they're bigger and jollier, too."

"That is a good, sound human document," said an officer of the Ford Motor Company. "I suppose the average Ford car is actually used four times as much as any other car. To about six hundred thousand Ford owners and their families the word Ford means not merely motoring, but transportation—not merely a vehicle of luxurious pastime, but the easiest, quickest, most economical 'way to everywhere.' That's all."

John D. Buys Ford

Oct. 22—Two distinguished Americans have recently joined the huge list of Ford owners. The first is President Woodrow Wilson, who has bought a Ford for runs in and about Washington, particularly for "emergency calls" to the golf-course. The other is John D. Rockefeller, who is using his Ford to inspect his estate at "Forest Hill," Cleveland, and like the President in one respect at least, to get to his golf game with the least possible delay.—advertisement.
